SF TIE FIGHTER

THE FIRST ORDER'S feared Special Forces have considerable resources at their disposal. These include a specialized model of TIE fighter that packs additional armament into a craft designed for long-range operations away from a base or command ship. Special Forces TIEs are two-person fighters that carry a hyperdrive and deflector shields, as well as banks of high-yield deuterium cells that provide additional power to the engines, weapons, or shields and can be recharged from the TIE's solar panels. The TIE/SF's heavy weaponry and improved defensive capabilities make it a versatile attack ship suited to a range of mission profiles, from reconnaissance to combat operations.

WEAPONS PLATFORM

The Special Forces TIE's deuterium cells drive a weapons package far more powerful than that of a TIE/Ao. The TIE/SF's primary weapons are its four long laser cannons, but a heavy weapon turret and warhead launcher gives it a 360-degree field of fire and the ability to deliver specialized ordnance. The pilot can fire all weapons, but the turret is ideally controlled by the TIE/SF's rear-facing gunner.

MASS EFFECT

While the TIE/Ao uses a single ion reactor aft of the pilot's seat, the TIE/SF derives power from twin reactors set on either side of the command pod. The TIE/SF's additional armament, shield generators, and powercell banks create more heat than the craft can dissipate, a problem designers at Sienar-Jaemus have attempted to solve with an experimental ionflux cooling system. All of these systems make the TIE/SF substantially heavier than a standard TIE, and the pylons between the command pod and wings have been reinforced with layers of alloy bracing.
